Description

Day out in Cambridge has been in  a private collection  since it was purchased from Bonham's LondonFred Yates was born in a suburb of Manchester, England in 1922. He began his working life as an insurance clerk but this career was cut short by the Second World War, during which he served as a Guardsman. His twin brother was killed during the failed attempt to capture the bridge at Arnhem in September 1944.[1]After the war Yates took up painting on his return to Manchester - initially as a painter and decorator. And it was whilst working in Manchester, and training to become a teacher, that Yates began painting - much in the vein of LS Lowry.By 1970 he was living and working in Cornwall, England, as a painter. In Cornwall, Yates painted almost exclusively outdoors - scenes of local village life, clifftop and beach scenes. It was around this period that Yates commercial success began after the St Ives 1939-64 exhibition at the Tate Gallery in London. [2] It was also around this time that Yates had a solo exhibition in Geneva which saw some of his work purchased by Henri Cartier-Bresson. [3]In later years, Yates moved to France. To a small village in the Haute-Vienne department. Here he painted local scenes and both met and encouraged local artists. [4] He also purchased a house in [Sablet], France. Despite his advanced age - he was already over 80 - he continued to paint regularly and travel widely right up until his death. Yates died of a heart attack on returning to England in July 2008. A Fred Yates Society has been established to assist in preserving and promoting his work. TO PURCHASE THIS PAINTING PHONE 07913848515 OR CLICK ON OUR WEBSITE
